View of the former Madras Theatre, located in Madras Lane off High Street, Kuala Lumpur (later Jalan Bandar; now Jalan Tun H S Lee) in 1960. It is said to be haunted and was burnt down in a fire in 1978. Shaw Brothers never rebuilt it and now the location where this theatre once stood is now an open-air car park.

View of the original Rex Cinema building; located along Sultan Street (Jalan Sultan), Kuala Lumpur. This building was destroyed in a fire in the early 1970s. Unlike the Madras Cinema, Shaw Brothers did rebuild this one in 1978 into the building that we see today. Now it's a unique arts and cultural hub called REXKL.

"A Summer Place" is a movie that dated back to 1959. If REX is showing current movies during that time, this means that the photo was taken in 1959.

That movie coming in June, Stranger in my arms, is also 1959.

Bank Pertanian building. The structure and outline of the General Post Office wing can be seen but the tower block has not been constructed yet.

yes... the old lee rubber factory batu 5 jalan gombak is actually right at the border of KL and Selangor. A school was built next to the factory (if not mistaken it was factory workers hostel before that). now has become medan idaman and the school has moved a bit further towards setapak garden. And there is kampung lee kong chian (lee rubber) across the street.

its pity that they didnt thought of saving the gates (art deco right?)...

View of the entrance into Petaling Street in downtown Kuala Lumpur circa 1981, back when this was a two way road. Photo was taken from the direction of Merdeka Roundabout heading into the heart of Petaling Street.
